Every state is a community of some kind, and every community is established with a view to some good; for mankind always act in order to obtain that which they think good. But, if all communities aim at some good, the state or political community, which is the highest of all, and which embraces all the rest, aims at good in a greater degree than any other, and at the highest good.

Aristotle

About the state

- City primarily consists of communities, not territory.
- Citizens must feel themselves masters of City in order to participate in its life.

Two ideas

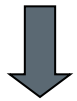

- Simplifying application forms and problem solution mechanisms
- Participation of communities in planning and decision making
- Accountability of institutions
- Support for community initiatives
